THE CITY OF HENDERSON

Visit Henderson

“We'll be glad to see you—and we believe you will be glad to see us”

Henderson is situated in the northern portion of North Carolina, county seat of Vance County, one of the richest and most productive tobacco and cotton counties in the State. The city has a population of 6,345 people, however, the city proper with the suburbs within a radius of a mile from its center, has a population of 12,000 or more.

Henderson is served by two of the largest railroads operating in the State, and has bus and truck lines extending out to all points. Paved highways lead into Henderson from five different directions, and from many other points the city may be reached over improved roads, all under State maintenance.

Henderson has a modern school system consisting of both high and grammar schools. The Henderson Institute, a Junior College for Colored people, which is supported by the Northern Presbyterian Church is also located in Henderson and thus affording higher educational advantages to this race.

Henderson is proud of its Public Library which was established in 1924. The library is housed in a beautiful building and is modern in every respect. Many thousand books are available for use of the public, besides the library operates the Dunbar Library at the Colored graded school for the Negroes.

Henderson is the home of The Jubilee Hospital, Colored, whose architecture is impressive and is well equipped to take care of and render medical service and attention for our people.

Henderson is a beautiful residential city. Its streets are lined with shade trees. You will always find a cordial and hearty welcome awaiting you in Henderson. Come and see our modern and progressive city. A spirit of optimism and confidence in Henderson's future prevails.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Last year we came to the end of a half century as an organization. We commemorated the foresight and fidelity of the founders with fitting tribute. The instrument bequeathed to us for fostering the science of medicine in North Carolina among Negroes, stands as a monument to those pioneers and to us a heritage.

Now in the beginning of the next half century, we are confronted with problems which in some aspects bear a resemblance to those that beset us in the past, yet in other ways they are altogether unrelated.

We are responsible to those yet to come for our stewardship. Shall we falter? We must not, we cannot. Every man must do his duty. We must continue to build by our interest—by our contributions to the science of medicine; and by our oath to give of our best to a cause so nobly wrought.

May I urge with confidence, that you be present at our fifty-first session in Henderson?

MAX C. KING, M.D.,
President.
